Volume 9 Issue 1

October - November - December 2009

Message from the President

Roger Haas, President

The GRHS Convention at Rapid City, South Dakota on September 9-13 set the pace for activities & direction for the coming year. The Bylaws were revised. The increase of our annual dues were voted on, GRHS Board Directors were elected, etc.

Our own Katherine Bell will be helping in several ways: volunteering in the Library, representing GROW at the Opening Ceremony with the carrying of the GROW Banner and in the Closing Memorial Services sharing the names of those having passed on during our past year. Thank you, Katherine! Bob Schauer is also taking in the Convention and will be sharing in our 27 September Chapter Meeting.

How have you spent your summer? Each of us has done something exciting & rewarding. Would you share your experiences via an article in our Newsletter and/or at our Sept. Chapter Meeting? For example, Sharon & Bill Bell-Glenn are spending a month in Germany; however, they will not be home before our Sept Chapter meeting. Adi & Barbara Hartfeil have just returned from South America and will be sharing in this NL issue. Roger & Roberta have attended several reunions at Ashley & Linton, North Dakota in August as well as working on an entry/enclosure of their pioneer family's 1900 underground Root Cellar. Kurt & Jane Radtke are entertaining a number of families from Germany as we are writing. Your sharing will help all of us in staying current and being informed.

The German America Society is continuing the negotiations with the Portland Community College (PCC) regarding the sale of its century old German historic campus and PCC's expansion of its campus. Our meeting place with the expanded GROW Library will be relocating. The German America Society is exploring possible buildings in the Portland area for its Cultural Center, its Club & other meeting /storage spaces, the Saturday School, office areas, etc. It will perhaps not happen for a year, but know that it is just a matter of time.

Our current and most successful event was the annual GROW Picnic with at least 59 attendees at the beautiful spacious Deutsches Gardens/Park. The 30 August 2009 from 11 am to 3:30 pm was a good time to enjoy each other's fellowship and good food. Oscar Geiszler and his family were represented this year even better than last year. You will want to plan now to begin inviting your family to next year's picnic /potluck and to other activities during the coming year. What a good opportunity and informal way

Ed's Corner

On the third Saturday in July I attended the 7th annual Weber family reunion and picnic held at the home of my youngest, by 21 years, brother located on Whidbey Island, Washington. I was the oldest family person in attendance with one exception, my first cousin who is 18 months older than me.

Ed Weber

With all the in-laws of the family there were five generations of people, 38, in attendance at the affair and if everyone who was invited attended, the count of attendance would reach 100+. I think it can be said that all who attended have direct relationship with Germans from Russia Heritages. Often heard at the reunion and at GROW meetings, “do you remember when?”

I'm currently reading a biography of John Adams the second president of the United States and was interested in the political chicanery that was happening at the time he was serving as president. He served as Vice President during the two terms of the first President, George Washington. In 1799 when the Capital of the United States was in Philadelphia, there was a pre-election campaign for the position of President of the United States that became pretty nasty. On December 14, 1799 George Washington died at Mount Vernon. The day after Christmas, the official day of mourning occurred in the capital and there was a funeral parade for George Washington. For GROW members who are old enough, do you remember seeing the funeral march for John F Kennedy?

In 1799 there was no TV, radios, super highways and a winter trip from Philadelphia to Boston took two or three weeks by horseback or coach. The nation's funeral for its first President and greatest hero had a large audience. The funeral march started at Congress Hall and wound its way through the city to the German Lutheran Church which had the largest seating capacity of any church in the city.

Our German relatives not only migrated to Russia, Poland and North America in the 1700s but also had a lot of German soldiers who deserted the British army during the American Revolution and settled in the new United States.

That's it from Ed's Corner.

to learn from each other and catch up on the latest events. Jan Haberman was the head engineer and Jane Radtke arranged for the facilities for this occasion. Please share your thanks with our wonderful “J girls”—Jan & Jane. It did not all come together by accident. Thanks, Jan and Jane!

One sad event is the passing of Thelma Wiest's Mother, Pauline (Just) Bartel. Dr. Bill Wiest has been our Presenter and the Wiests have been wonderful friends and Supporters for GROW. We extend our condolences and love to the family. We invite you to share your setbacks, losses, etc. Our GROW family cares for you.

GROW Picnic 2009

by Jan Haberman

Sunday the 30 August was a cloudy day to start with, but ended up a beautiful summer day. Nestled among the beautiful trees at the Deutches Haus grounds, we had our 8th annual GROW Picnic. We had the largest attendance ever with 60 people.

I want to thank Kurt & Jane Radtke for opening up until I could get there to help. Jane was already cooking in the kitchen and slaving away as usual. Kurt was waiting for instructions. Thank you Kurt. Katherine, Sharon Bell, Bill and family, Arlene Maston, and Oscar Geiszler's family gave a helping hand.

We want to thank Tom Reynolds, who is Oscar Geiszler's son-in-law, for bringing BBQ ribs for all to enjoy. Everyone brought wonderful dishes and dessert...all donated by the members and family friends.

Also, I want to thank Jane Radke and Kay Carey for cleaning up the kitchen.

It was good to see Roger & Roberta Haas make it back...both tired from North Dakota working on their farm.

Thank you Ed and Anita Weber, Oscar Geiszler as well as the German American Society for bringing/giving us ice and for the many members and families who attended.

I hope I haven't forgotten anyone. If I have, sorry and thanks to all for making this an excellent picnic.

Looking forward to seeing you all at our next Chapter meeting 27 September to hear all about the GRHS Convention at Rapid City, South-Dakota.

From the Black Sea to North Dakota and Beyond: John Schmaltz's Russian Passport from 1898

by Dr. Eric J. Schmaltz,
Northwestern Oklahoma State University in Alva

In mid-2008, I first learned from relatives in California that my great-grandfather John Schmaltz's Russian passport still existed. They had been keeping it safe for all these years. After informing me about it, they were so kind to send me nearly a dozen scanned digital images of a truly well-preserved artifact of our Schmaltz family's great trek from the Black Sea region near Odessa to central North Dakota during the final months of 1898.

On the passport cover, the double-headed black eagle, the official symbol of Russia's old Romanov dynasty, is easily recognizable. Much of the official text is handwritten and printed in Russian (pre-1918 style), but in following sections, John and his children subsequently wrote down family dates, names, and places in a mixture of Russian, old German script, and English.

To provide some historical context to this passport, a few general comments are necessary. The first Germans from Russia settled in North and South Dakota in the 1870s. This significant migration intensified in the 1880s, 1890s, and early 1900s and continued until around 1920, when the U.S. government established strict immigration quotas over the next four decades. According to U.S. census data, North Dakota's total population increased by more than 50% between 1900 and 1910. Most Black Sea German settlements are concentrated in the north-central, southwestern, and south-central parts of North Dakota. These clustered communities actually overlap, creating a general triangular region that scholars have traditionally referred to as the state's "German-Russian Triangle."

During the 1890s, a number of Schmaltzes from the village of Kandel (today called Ribalskoye) and surrounding areas in Ukraine already had immigrated to the "Triangle," especially Emmons County which lies in its south-central section. For example, Ludwig Schmaltz (1833-1893) and his family came to the United States through Ellis Island on October 3, 1889. He, his wife and sons homesteaded in Emmons County near Hague, North Dakota, until 1909. One of the sons, Peter (1870-1942), sold his homestead and moved to a new farm close to Prelate, Saskatchewan, Canada. Some of his descendants later moved on to Alberta, Canada.

My great-grandfather John Schmaltz (1879-1951) soon followed in the footsteps of these and other Germans from Russia to Emmons County. Why he made this life-altering decision, his descendants will never know with any degree of certainty.

On page 2 of John's Russian passport, the travel pass section indicates that the permanent village residence of John Ivanov (the Russian patronymic, meaning "son of John [Ivan]") Schmaltz, age 19, was the village of Kandel in the Odessa administrative region. It also reports that he was "subject to a summons" in 1900. This reference to an appeal or a call probably alludes to the fact that when he turned 21 years old in that year, he was subject to military conscription. If he would have returned to Russia at that time, officials could have taken note of his draft status in the passport. By most family accounts, his departure evidently had something to do with the military draft. After 1874, when the tsar enacted universal military service, this fear in Russia was unquestionably real among young ethnic German men and other minorities who were fast approaching the conscription age of 21.

Several years ago, the U.S. federal government established an official website for the former immigration center at Ellis Island in New York. Here one may click and find documentation of immigrant Johann Schmalz's (later John Schmaltz's) entry into the United States. He could never have imagined in his wildest dreams that more than a century later his great-grandson and others could access his records with the greatest of ease. According to the passenger record, John's date of arrival into the United States was November 9, 1898, and his ethnicity is listed as "Russian" (i.e., as a subject of the Russian Empire). In addition, the records list his home village as "Kandol" instead of "Kandel." This might result from the immigration official's misspelling of it, but it might also capture the sound of John's spoken German dialect. Not least of all, John's signature also appears

According to the Ellis Island Records, John's age is correctly marked at 19 years upon his arrival. Moreover, the passenger record shows that he was single and unmarried at the time, and that a 16-year-old sister accompanied him on the journey—Agnes (1882-1965). Records state that he carried with him a total of $70.00, a fair amount of money in those days.

According to an oral history interview a few years ago by Agnes' son Peter A. Kraft (1917-2008) with North Dakota State University in Fargo, John and Agnes by the time of their voyage to America had a stepfather whose surname was Heintz. The immigrant John wrote down in his passport that when he was about eight years old, his father had in fact died in 1887 at the age of 47. Other family accounts add that perhaps the impetus for their migration to America was the stepfather. The basic story goes that the stepfather, a wealthy man, had forced John to sleep in the family barn, and that he was probably more than happy to pay for the younger stepchildren's departure from the household.

On pages 2 and 17, the passport certifies that 10 rubles were paid for the passport, which permits the freedom of passage with the affixed seal, which can be found stamped on the middle of page 3. The passport also informs us that it is signed in the city of Kherson in Ukraine by the governor or magistrate on September 30, 1898, a little over a month before the siblings' arrival at Ellis Island in New York.

The Ellis Island records state that John and Agnes departed Russia first for the German Empire. Their point of departure was Bremen, Germany, the great port city that had long served as the gateway for Central and East European immigrants to the Western Hemisphere. Their passenger ship was German-built, the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse (Emperor William the Great). Years later, on July 26, 1914, the Germans scuttled the ship in Spanish West Africa to avoid capture by the British at the start of World War I.

Some family members think that John and his sister might have spent a brief period living and working in Chicago, Illinois, before making their way from New York to North Dakota. It is reasonable to assume that they would have traveled by train through Chicago to the northern plains. As far as I can discern, U.S. Census Records from 1900 do not show John or Agnes residing in either Morton or Emmons County in North Dakota, though they might have been living elsewhere in the state at that time; however, we know that in 1902 Agnes married Germans from Russia immigrant Adam Kraft (1881-1935) in Strasburg in Emmons County, and that in 1903 John married Germans from Russia immigrant Clara Bullinger (1884-1953) in St. Anthony in Morton County.

For almost a century, the Schmaltz family name and "meat market" were virtually synonymous in Emmons County. After farming near St. Anthony in Morton County for a number of years, John Schmaltz brought his young family to Strasburg in 1910 to seek his fortune. He turned out to be a successful local businessman, expanding to create a second store in Linton in 1926 and passing his trade on to his seven sons. Around 1945, John sold the Strasburg store upon his retirement and moved to Linton. Then in 2006, his descendants sold the Schmaltz Food Pride (former Schmaltz Meats) in Linton, in effect closing a long chapter in the county's history.

In view of these recent findings, I wonder how many other Germans from Russia have searched their attics, basements, or closets to find rare family heirlooms such as passports?

Coming Home

by Roger Haas

After having been away for 63 years, it was a wonderful experience to see the root cellar that my Great Grandfather Georg Haas with his sons Frederick, Adam, and Daniel built around 1900. So says Shirley Haas Iszler, daughter of Benjamin & Pauline Haas who inherited /acquired the family farm with the root cellar from Daniel Haas in 1939 and sold it in 1946 when Shirley was five years old.

Roberta Haas, Shirley (Haas) Iszler and her husband Norlyn Iszler.

In the early 1900's until about 1950, it was common place for every home to have a cellar of some sort, but the above pictured domed chiseled rock with earthen floor was/is the largest known Dakota pioneer cellar measuring 21ft long, 10.5ft wide and 9ft high. Fifteen steps, approximately three feet wide, lead to the vaulted area. The original door at the last step can be seen in the above photo behind the persons pictured above leaning against the rear double rocked wall. This door sealed the underground temperatures to keep the stored items from freezing in the frigid Dakota winter temperatures and from spoiling from the hot summer heat. There was some ventilation from a rectangular five inch vent at the rear of cellar. This underground cave was the equivalent of our modern refrigerator.

The cellar was lighted with a couple of 6 volt light bulbs powered from a car battery which was charged by a wind charger from the roof of the new adjacent house built in 1913. When the batteries were not charged up, a kerosene lantern was

by Adi & Barbara Hartfeil

We began our trip on a small National Geographic ship for about a week with a total 100 passengers at the end of July. We had naturalists as guides and landed on about six different Galapagos islands via Zodiacs. All the animals and birds on these islands were very tame and did not fear any humans and so we got some excellent close-up pictures and were able to approach them easily.

All the islands were volcanic formed and pretty desolate except one island which had a small city on it. This island was one of the oldest and therefore was green with tropical plants and flowers. On this island we saw giant, 400 pound, tortoises which get as old as 150 years and are being raised in a park with some released and wandering about. We also saw big sea turtles in the water and Barb snorkeled with some of them. The sea lions were everywhere and were a delight to see swimming around while snorkeling.

Our favorite spot on the Galapagos trip was visiting a small, flat island with just brush for cover which was used by frigates, albatross and blue-footed booby birds. The frigate birds were pairing up with the male frigates showing off their bright red and blown-up chests, while other type of birds were laying eggs or raising their chicks.

We spent the next week near the northwest rain forests of Costa Rica. We made a one day trip to Nicaragua and spent about one hour crossing the border. We had to cross two border checkpoints just like we did last year when we crossed from Poland into the Ukraine. A long line of waiting semi trucks was also similar. Nicaragua was very safe and friendly and they are trying to lure tourists back to a now peaceful country.

Our most exciting part on this last part of our trip was zip lining on a single cable across green forest canyons in Costa Rica. The difficult and most fun part was at the end in trying to slow down before running into the friendly attendants or the padded trees just behind them. If you slowed down too soon, then you had to arm-pull yourself onto the platform. If you came in too fast, the attendants quickly threw a rope in front of your pulley which slowed you down immediately. Another mistake, which I made after failing to completely understand the pigeon English instructions, was to grab the steel cable to slow down which resulted in almost separating my arm from its shoulder socket.

used to see the glass canned jars, fresh apples, potatoes, milk, cream, butter etc. whatever was stored.

Around the early 1950's, the Rural Electrical Association (REA) brought electric power to the area, and refrigerators became the convenience to almost all homes. The subsequent owner to Ben Haas, Elmer Woehlhoff, continued to use the cellar for potatoes & boxes of apples, etc. until the late 70s. Following that time, the above-ground entrance structure fell into disrepair; two trees growing one on each side of the stairwell caused the stairwell to slightly bulge toward the inside. Debris and dirt layered the rocked steps.

In 2005, the root cellar restoration began with the removal of the debris and earth covering the steps, by cutting down the adjacent trees, and covering the entrance.

In 2007 under-ground wiring was brought to the cellar site to replace the old deteriorated wind charger electric power lines. However, not anything substantial was done in the way of restoration until the summer of 2009. The tree stumps were hand removed, the first three steps were replaced, and a foundation was poured.

Roberta near the electrical breaker panel at the root cellar entry.

Careful cementing around the stairwell opening was essential to preserve the integrity of the entry arch and to discourage/restrict rodents from entering.

The new foundation was poured outside of the remaining original foundation to preserve the approximate remaining smaller entry structure. A

Roger Haas and Karolyn (Haas) Kaster nailing the sheeting on the replaced root cellar structure.

Completed root cellar with steel door, metal roof, vinyl siding and electrical lighting.

It can be noted that the replaced root cellar entry structure under construction has a gentler roof slope to ease the access, and avoid the claustrophobic feeling. You can compare the old and new besides envisioning the larger stairwell opening for ingress & egress as can be seen in the above photos.

Plans have commenced to list this root cellar in the Federal Registry. To accommodate visitors, this larger entry would be more appropriate & appealing. The finished root cellar entry structure photo reveals a steel door and metal roof, vinyl siding with electric lighting.

Upon repair of the lower stairwell corners, replacement of the bottom stairwell door, and straightening the stairwell bulges, a handrail is planned.

GROW Membership Renewal 2010

Dear GROW Member Family,

The last two years my letters to you have been pretty much the same with only a few necessary updates. It is difficult reaching each of you with the same message.

However, I will do my best to make it as personal as possible appealing to you as if we were having a face-to-face discussion.

The subject is renewal of our GROW memberships. The Board and I have been very much aware that our membership has been "slipping off" from previous years. As membership chairman, I have the responsibility to increase our numbers, or at least maintain those we have.

We are aware, as I am sure you are, of the bleak picture of the Oregon/Washington economy. Although a lot of us are retirees, the cost of living has risen and some of us have suffered losses in our retirement funds.

Perhaps by giving you advance notice of both the 2010 GRHS and GROW dues, it may make it easier to fit them into your budget prior to the holidays. Please see the membership application below for your convenience. If you have completed this form recently and there are no changes to the information, just indicate your name and address on the form to enclose with your payment.

On the brighter side, those of us who are able to attend chapter meetings have had a good year with above average attendance. We have tried to offer a variety of travelogues and personal experiences of hardships of our people, as well as informative presentations to assist those of us who are working on our genealogical histories.

Last month, we had an impressive number of people attend the annual GROW picnic at the Deutches
